SHORT ANSWER

Massachusetts has two USCIS field offices: Boston (JFK Federal Building, Room E-160) and Lawrence (280 Merrimack Street). If you live in Boston you belong to the Boston office, but fingerprints and photos are taken in Revere, not in the city. No office takes walk-ins. There are two immigration courts, Boston (Room 320) and Chelmsford. The apostille costs $6 per document and comes from one place, One Ashburton Place, Room 1719. Turkish citizens have a consulate general right in the city.

NEW STATE LAWS: WHAT THEY PROTECT AND WHAT THEY DO NOT

- G.L. c.147 s.64 (since September 4, 2026): state and local police (including the Boston Police Department), sheriffs, MBTA and Massport police and court staff may not ask about immigration status and may not hold anyone past their release time solely on an ICE detainer.
- G.L. c.221D (from November 3, 2026): no officer, including a federal one, may make a civil arrest at a courthouse without showing a judge-signed warrant or order. An administrative ICE warrant or a document from an immigration judge does not meet the requirement.
- But: the first law does not bind ICE or CBP, and neither law gives a private right of action; the Attorney General enforces them. Whether federal agents will comply with c.221D is not yet known. Neither is a promise of protection; if you meet ICE or CBP, speak with an immigration attorney first.
